Rnew It Was Coming. [Signal Officer's Talk in New York Tuesday night.]

"Well, it's coming," said Dr. Domhauser, leaning back in his chair.

"What's coming?" - Cooler weather."

"You don't say so." "It is, indeed. There is a wave coming from the northwest that will reach here by Thursday. It is booming over the country like Colonel Sellers's mules. It will be cooler on Thursday. But don't make it too strong to make people think the thermometer is going down to 65°, for it isn't; and then when it don't, they will think we made a bad prediction. Draw it mild, and say it will be slightly cooler. The thermometer may get down to 80° or 85°, but it probably will not go below that. That is probably will not go below that. That is cool for this time of year."

A circus nowadays is good or bad in proportion to the number of tons it has in elephants. Years ago when a show came along its one elephant was the admiration of the town as it trod ponderously along, contrasting grandly with the smallest man in the company seated on an undersized pony that trotted by the side of the splen-did elephant. Now we speak of a one-elephant show as we would of a one-horse farmer. A bootblack would not stop shining for a moment to look at a five-elephant exhibition. Give this country elephants or give it nothing. The alarming thing about this new craze is its immense possibilities. Where will it end? In a year or two may we not see on the bills, instead of an advertisement of a procession a mile long, the announcement of a drove of elephants a mile long? That is, the drove, not the elephants. How would this look on the bills?: "Fiveclaw's gigantic aggregation | 734 elephants in line. We have $10,000 to bet that the so-called menagerie that is now deluding the country has only 500 elephants in its procession. When Fiveclaw, the great circus manager for the last quarter century, has come to a beggarly half-thousand drove of elephants he will quit the show business and go to ditching. Free Press.

One of the college magazines sums up commencement in this way :

The senior blacks his boots
And clows up his way,
Makes his little bow
And says his little fay.
Then he makes another.
And waits for his bouquet;
White the people clap their hands White the people clap men.
And the band begins to play.

The rumors respecting the practical readoption by the German Government of the mixed gold and silver standard is confirmed by the president of the National Bank telling the committee that silver sales have not been merely suspended, but absolutely.discontinued. In keeping with this announcement, the old thaler-pieces are being plentifully reissued. The quantity of silver thus indefinitely kept in circulation beyond the sum fixed by law amounts to about 500,000;-000 marks .- New York Tribune.
